WHO ARE WE?

We're Charlie and Rosie, two Emergency Medicine Doctors based in Exeter, UK. We've decided to switch our scrubs for the sea, salt and swell of the Atlantic Ocean. What we lack in rowing experience, we more than make up for in determination...

WHAT ARE WE PLANNING?

We're taking part in the 2020 Talisker Whisky Atlantic Challenge, the world's toughest rowing race. We have set our sights on breaking the women's pairs world record of 50 days.

WHY ARE WE DOING IT?

It is becoming increasingly recognised that women can equal, or outperform men in many ultra-endurance events. The question is why? Using ourselves as subjects, we are hoping to further understand the physiological and psychological reasons for this. We can't wait to push our own personal boundaries and promote female participation in sport.

PARTNERS NEEDED

Supporting Team Emergensea offers a unique opportunity for sponsors to back Rosie and Charlie's ground-breaking research and there are a range of packages to suit all budgets.

We're looking for like-minded partners to encourage us and support our journey.

PROUD TO BE SUPPORTING:

ABOUT CHARLIE

A tough few years has seen Charlie lose half her bowel and require major pelvic surgery, and yet her determination to push boundaries intensifies.

Known as:

Charles

Most likely to:

be overboard swimming

Most excited for:

'sundowners' on the deck

Most scared of:

Rozza when hangry

ABOUT ROSIE

Rosie's illustrious rowing career began at university where she stroked the college 2nd boat to get 'bumped' a record-breaking 4 times in one race, after getting stuck in a bush. These days, she continues to train hard on the Devon coast, making trips to the pub in her boat 'Stormzy' when the sun's out.

Known as:

Rozza

Most likely to:

eat all the snacks by day 2

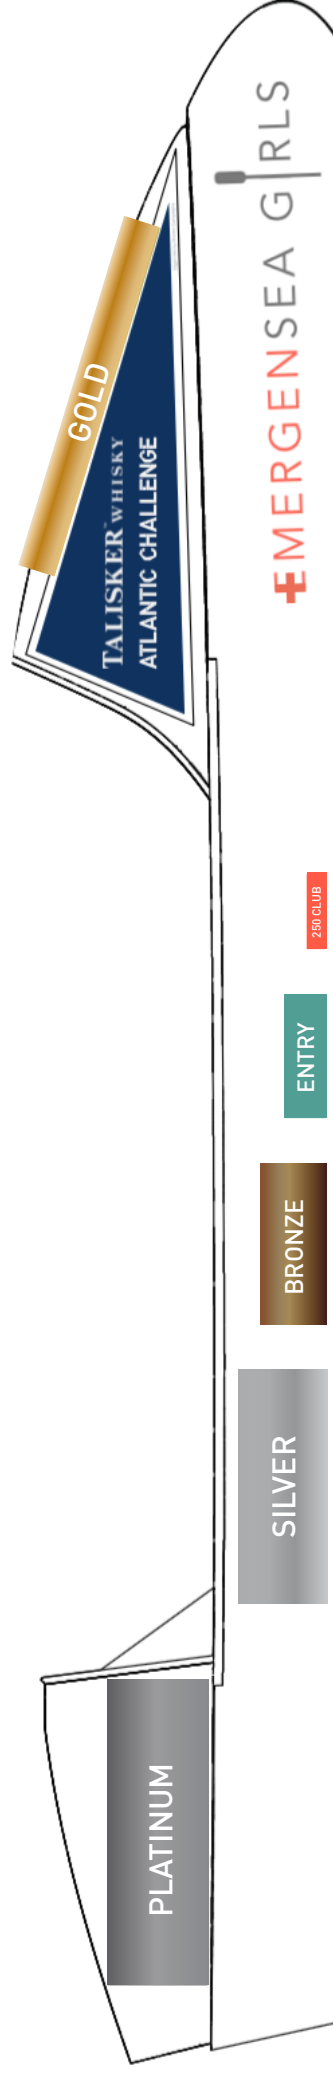

Most excited for:

surf some fangin' waves

Most scared of:

limited running options whilst at sea
